Inclusive Training in Relation to Rural to Urban Migration

Prepared by Shama Hader and Ajad Khan from Indus University

Abstract

With growing globalization and free trade, the world has seen a rise in job opportunities in urban centers. With growing wage gap and climate change, opportunities for rural population are getting limited. Hence, the world is seeing a surge in urban migration on a mass scale. Like all other aspects this brings challenges for the higher education in urban centers. This paper identifies the area of concern and highlights different features employed at Indus University to overcome this challenge. Future work with more extensive data based research could bring more solutions at an academic level.
